Your eyes are closed, but you feel a nice cool breeze on your face and you can hear the sound of leaves rustling.

You move a little, and it seems like you're lying on something soft.

Somehow, this feels like paradise.

If not for that urgent need for you to clear your bladder.

You open your eyes. It's dusk, and the clouds roll by slowly in the breeze.

As you stare into the sky, you notice a streak of red that seems to be coming closer.

The streak is accompanied by a whizzing sound. The closer it gets, the louder the sound.

You squint, trying to figure out what the mysterious object is.

Before you know it, the whizzing sound gets to a deafening volume, and you hear a loud crash not far from you. It seems the object has hit the ground.

You bolt upright, full bladder and all.

Wait a minute, wasn't this supposed to be paradise?

WTF just happened?

You look around frantically, but all you see is a desolate grassland that looks like pure wilderness.

There are mountains in the distance, but there's no sign of civilization.

You suddenly realize how alone you are.

You start searching in your pockets for your mobile phone. You need to contact someone, anyone.

Strangely, the device that you pull out of your pocket, while similar in size to your phone, is something you've never seen before.

You turn it over in your hands, trying to find a switch of sorts.

Found it! You press the button and the screen buzzes to life.

"No connection found"

You try to turn the device on and off a few times, but the screen just shows the same mocking white text.

Great. You're in a desolate grassland with nothing but a device that doesn't work. What now?

You pace around for a while.

There might be unknown threats. You don't want to risk getting a jumpscare while peeing.

That would be the worst thing ever.

There doesn't seem to be anything worth doing in the area you're in either.

Wait a minute.

The crash earlier!

That's got to be a part of the plot right?

You smirk to yourself. How obvious!

But follow the plot you shall. Soon, you find yourself approaching the strange object.

It looks like a metal canister or capsule of sorts.

Still intact despite having crashed to the ground, and way too small to contain another lifeform like you.

So it's not a Superman storyline, you think to yourself.

A part of the capsule is embedded in the ground from the crash impact, but you can see a "Alpha M0722-D" engraved on it. And a "Timeleap Industries" right below that.

Right after reading the words, you feel a horrible splitting headache.

You grab your head and close your eyes, feeling as though you're about to remember something important.

Although your eyes are closed, you feel as though you can see fleeting images.

Strangely, they look like Telegram speech bubbles?!

Slaine

Loving the transparency of the Dev team and their engagement with the community in making their decisions the price is stable because everyone in is holding, every day i get an update on what the team have achieved that day. i praise my team at work for doing the same, this is no pump and dump 1 week farm.

Tnx mate

18:43

WTF was that?

It seems like the images disappeared as suddenly as they appeared.

You shake your head, deciding to explore the capsule further. You walk closer and notice that it's releasing a mist.

The stench reminds you of an old humidifier that hasn't had its liquid changed for ages.

What a disgusting capsule, you think to yourself.

But you've already gone this far, and it looks like the mist is dissipating.

Soon, you notice a shiny object lying neatly within the capsule.

Your parents have always told you not to pick up random objects for fear of bad luck.

But being the rebellious degen that you are, you decide to reach for the object.

It feels cold and heavy. As you open your palm to look at it, you realize that it's a key.

Your first thought was to take a photo, post it on Twitter, and see if anyone of your 65k followers knew what it was.

Your account is botted, you know that, but what the heck.

Wait, it seems that the device you grabbed from your pocket wasn't your phone. It was the mysterious device that had no connection whatsoever.

As you hold the device in your hand, you feel the key in your other hand start to shiver and grow lighter.

Wait, the key just disappeared into thin air!?

At that moment, you notice that the screen of the mysterious device had lit up.

The key that disappeared was now rotating on the device screen!

Well, we can't animate it on a PDF so just imagine it doing a cool rotation 😁

There were three words below the key: "You're welcome. Survive."

Great, you think to yourself. The first thing you need to is pee - survival can wait.
